Kevin Crumly has turned his beliefs into actions.

Crumly, who joined the Community Foundation for the Land of Lincoln board in 2010, established the Troxell Financial Advisors Fund through the Community Foundation.

“I’m excited about it. I really believe in what the Community Foundation is trying to do in our community,” said Crumly, who owns Troxell Financial Advisors. “Setting up a fund makes sense because we can add to it from time to time and it’s available to work with. It’s a good concept. Being on the board, it’s something I believe in and I should be involved in.”

The versatility and planning component the donor-advised fund provides funders is a real draw. Local businesses are asked a multitude of times throughout the year to donate to various causes. By having a set philanthropic system, businesses can better plot their financial giving.

“I haven’t focused on how I will use the fund,” Crumly said. “I figure over the course of the year I will figure it out. This allows you to plan better, think things through. I think that is one of the reasons why the Foundation has been so successful.”

Crumly doesn’t plan on figuring everything out alone. He will work with Ryan Davlin and Scott Norris, both who work at Troxell Financial Advisors, to help set the fund’s agenda. He also hopes the fund’s establishment shows the importance of community involvement to his younger colleagues.

“It’s a good example for them and gives them a way to get involved in some community work,” Crumly said. “I see the fund as a place that works for me. They might want to contribute from time to time.”
